ORIGINAL POETRY.

TO THE AUTHOR OF ROY RECKLESS. If feeble pen as mine presume to sing Of renius in its young but lefty flight, Beyond the earth on buoyant fancy's wis To gather wreaths from some celestial height; If I could sip from Appollonian spring

A draught that would invest my soul with light, My praise abould gladly dwell upon thy n To weare a garland for it rich in fame ;

tr is no lille art that thou hast framed. To cheat the world with talents never thins, And little boots it thee to be ashamed f such resplendant greins of soul, as shine O'er signatures that proudly might be named To gild the mem'ry and embalm the mind Of intellect, that pours its treasures forth, To prove it rich, in genius and in worth.

I would not be a flatterer, for I hate ch apeing fools, the sycophants of power; Beyond a thing that thus would vainly cower. And the' I am thy friend, that hath no weight In this my praise oh! no-'tis rapture's dower; For I have read thy tale attentivel And deem it worthy genius, worthy thee !

Forgive this public tribute, and forgive What thou wilt deem this partial meed of praise, It is thy due-and the' I cannot weave A chaplet for thy brow of nobler bays, Receive this kindly, and with it receive or's wishes, that thy future days, Mar glide adown the pathway to the tomb, at a thern to sting, or cloud to gloo Feb. 13, 1827.

When Spring upon the ocean wave, Her smile of beauty throws, The perils of the storm to brave, Again Eugenio goes. Affection's tear the eye shall dim. When he is far away; And oft maternal sighs to him

In lonely hours shall stray ; And Love in sorrow come, when all Around unconscious sleep, When night shall shade the latticed hall. Where Beauty wakes to weep-

When thought to friendship's eye shall bring Forms scatter'd far and wide, She'll follow then on fancy's wing, His pathway o'er the tide. But yet perchance in other climes, That restless spirit there, May lose the dream of other times,

Replete with gloom and care. The lip of scorn that now must meet The idle gazer's eye, May wear a softer smile to great The stranger passing by Yet still methinks, if fairer flowers

Rise on a foreign strand, He'll not forgel (at least) the bowers That gild his native land-And then should warmer hearts to share His pains or pleasures come,

He'll think of those while musing there, That hallow'd once his Home. Away! may ne'er a cuder gale Around Eugenio rise, Than the soft breath which somes to hail The star of evening skics. Again may hope with gentle beams,

The clouds of care illume, Like morning's carliest smile which gleams On ocean's starless gloom. Princeton, 1827.

WHAT IS LOVE LIKE? What are those feelings to us given, That do so much partake of Heaven; Which floats, then sinks upon the ears? Or like the whispering zephyr's gale, When dying in the silent vale? Soft comes this passion on the soul, PPis like those dreams to angels given, And wafts the soul on wings to Heav'n. Tie like the silver beams that sleep, Upon the dark, and rolling deep, Tie like the vessel's silent glide, Upon the water's moonlight tide; speaks-yet silent as the grave; "Its true as Sol who tracks the Hear'n, As pure as dew which fulls at even ; Tis warm as Etna's burning breast, "lis soft as innocence's rest-"Tie firm on earth, as fix'd in Heav'n, "Tis paredise to woman given.

ERNESTINE.

TO A.

They have called me deceiver, and suiled my name With a tale of natrath to pollute it with shame-They have prated a slander to canker thy heart With the dread of suspicion, that torturing smart Of love, when it fears that those vows were untrue, Which fell from those lips we have madly clung to? The blackest of calumnies round me they've flung, Whilst the guile of a demon inspired their tongue, And the rankness of envy, embitter'd with hell, cir false hearts, as on thee a burning glauce fell ! Oh, the fiends! did they hope thy young bosom

When they saw thy distraction and 'sembled the

When they saw the rose fading away from thy cheek, Thy beauty all pale, and thy utterance weak! Oh, the worms! the vile worms, they believed then hadat changed, And that I would turn mad, and he madly avenged-Alus! the poor idiots, it scarce chafes my scorn, To list the gross lies swelling envy has been ! But fear thee not, dearest, my curse shall not fall On a thing that's beneath it-oh, no! for the gail my spirit had never been nurtur'd with pride, If a rather would crush than turn meering aside! That I loved thre sincarely ! advert thee as one,

Who would cling to my fortunes when friendship

Who would stem the world's current of slander, and Thro' the rage of its billows unmoved, if my bride, Who'd conten a the thick vapour of enry's for breath, And cling to her love at his grapple with death -That would smile on the world and its powers of wrath, If devotion unchanged would illumine her path-As one whom I worshipp'd, whose heart was a shrin-Which immutably bient all its throbbings with

That I loved thee, my dearest, the pulse of my soul The creature who there has eternal control; But oh ! how enfeebled seem words to convey, Of that intense passion, the earliest ray; How void of emotion is language with me, When my soul would pour forth all its treasures

But my fears are all sille-thou never didst dream That I had play'd false-and to thee ?-ob! the

Of a curse so detested would wither thy smile, With the thought that all men were creatures of guile,

And the beauty that laughs in thy elegant mice Would perish, and thou be of sorrow the que But away, hideous phantoms! we cheat me of joy, My love cannot wither, and thine cannot cloy, And what the' some bubblers have said I deceive, The lips must be magical then will believe !

And I heed not the idiets, but gage them contempt, For my dearest has faith, and from doubt is exempt! PREDERICK

THE MORALIST.

THE CHURCH YARD.

You have sauntered, perhaps, of a moon-light evening, out of the precincts of the liv-ing, moving world, to linger and contemplate among the grass grown memorials of those who are gine—

The body to its place, and the soul to heaven's grace, and the rest in God's own time." And the cest in God's own time."

An appaling chill shoots through the current of lite, at the undisturbed and universal silence of the scene—the stars tranquily shining on the while marble, and freely illuminating the name, which friendship had eaved for the slumberer beneath; here the grass waving in rank luxuriance, as if to hide the triumphs and the trophies of death, and there a human bone uneartised from its timeworn sepuicire, a glussity visitor to the realms of day; a wooden tablet, marking the repose of the hundle; a cross, the sign of the believer, and lofty and magnificent memorials over the mortal relies of the wealthy and the great. Ah! who, in such an assemble and the great.

and the great. Ah! who, in such an assemblage as this, can be accounted great! What gold survives the crucible of death.

We can learn nothing from the living which the dead do not teach us. Would beauty be med at and unpretending, let her quit the hall and the festival for a moment, and carry her tolet to the tomb. Would the great learn humility, the neurising charge. proud learn humility; the penurious charity; the frivolous seriosaness; the bigoted phishattropy; would the scholar ascertain the true objects of knowledge; the man of the world, the true means of happiness here and hereafter; and the ambitious, the true sources of greatness; let him retire awhile from the living and commune with the dead. We must all come to the mountal and selent grave. Our bones must mingle in one common mass. Our affections should travel in the same path, for they must terminate in one fearful issue. Life is full of facilities of virtue tearful issue. Life is full of facilities of virtue and of happiness; and when you would abuse them, go purify your affections, and humble your pride, and leave your hopes at the tomb of a friend, when the stars are shining upon it like the glorious beaus of religion on the mansion of death.

How should the hours of the Sabbath, that are not occupied by public worship, he spent! This question is often asked. The snawer to it must depend in some degree on the cu-cumstances of the person by whom it is made. this easy to say in general terms that the day should not be spent in indolence—nor sloth—nor worldly pleasure, but that it should be devoted to personal and social improvement. The methods best suited to accomment. The methods best suited to accom-plish this end will vary with individual situa-tion. - Deposits

POR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. HUMILIS.

Most men attach a degree of importance to themselves, however degraded they may be in the eyes of the world; even those who are absolutely insignificant are but rarely conscious of it; here and there we will observe some pensive and sol tary individual, stealing along the road side as it were, whom the frowns of fortune or contunely of markind, both decreased to receive the extension of the extensio mankind, hath depressed to sech a degree that society hath no charms for him, the transactions of the busy world delight him not. Aware that his mental or physical qualifications are received indifferently, or repulsively. he attempts not to obtrude, but lives for himself only.

I once heard of a diminutive and deformed Frenchman, who put a period to his exis-tence in consequence of his being little, old, and ugly, and because the women refused o smile upon him, for many men are so en-husiastically devoted to the finil and fragile part of human exitence, that his hath no charms for them without being permitted to touch the hem of woman's garment, or flutter in the sunshine of her approbation. How in the sunstance of her approbation. How fatally appalling then must be woman's power over men of this description, how must they shrink within themselves, and ank into bitter and corrolling despondence, when their affections, instead of being requited, re stifled by contemptuous indifference.

Humilis is of the slightest construction im aginable, short in stature; and modelled sho-ge her in such a stile as to preclude every trace of beauty, and with a countenance so distorted and singularly formed that the distorted and singularly formed that the magnanimity of his noble soul does not gleam forth, and the eye of the beholder involuntarily recoils from an inspection of it. Hast thou not observed, reader, how exquisitely seasible the mercary in the thermometer s, how it is clevated or depressed, when kissed by any passing breeze of a quarter or less degree of temperature, the seasibility of Hawill kindle in his bosom such a glow of feel-ing that his heart becomes aurabarged with the accumulated emotions of gratitude, and to manifest his sense of it, all his little energy will be exerted even to the risque of life will be exerted even to the risque of life and fortune. But causal thou inagine how his feelings, which are so acute, are paralyz-ed, and even extinguished, with metafication, grief, and contempt of him eff, when the cold bloode I murdever stabs them with disdain and contumely, merely because nature in and continuely, merely because nature in making up her medley has constituted him differently from others; under these circum-stances, oppressed and tortured into agony with grief, he fires from husan scan, and buried in his chamber, or some deep retreat, gives himself up to utter despair. How welfish is man, how unjust and unfeeling thow superficially, and upon what alight grounds he formeth his judgment; how rarely doth he reflect, that beneath a rough and rugged aspect, frequently lieth hid, like cinbers in shes, a soul pregnant with all the noble attributes of human nature. Tread not upon a worm if hat feeling; scowl not up in the ma-flowly, you may extinguish what, under kind auspices, might ill amounte the world.

MAS. J. Q. ADAMS.

Mrs. Adams, the wife of our present President, was the daugitar of the late Joshua Johnson, who married an English Lady in London prior to the Revolutionary war, which he was established as a nerchant, of the name of Nuth, and was appointed Consol at London by General Washington, which place he filled during fitteen years, in which time a large portion of his hard carned property was expended in saving from impressment, from starvation, from sickness and suffering, and for luneral expenses when dead, a number of American aramon, some of whom no doubt are living, and can testify to the fact. when dead, a number of American seamon, some of whom no doubt are living, and can testify to the fact. For these services Joshua Johnson never was remanarated by Congress. The office was a humble one, but that is certainly a useful one however obscure, on which deep not the lives and liberties of so large a portion of the community, whose rights are, or eight to be as dear to the nation as those of any of its Chizens. Johnso Johnson returned to his native country with a family of eight children, under the expectation of possessing a handsome property. He has present the season of the partners; and he was reduced to a state of the utimost distress. In this dreadful emergency, the late Mr. Adams gave him the place of buyerint modant of stamps, when enabled him to maintain his family; and their gratitude to the good old gootleman, who deared to do thus charry against the advice of his nearest (ricola, is as great as were his needs liberalis.

That children should love to go to rare shows and amusing exhibitions, is not strange, these things suit their years, and become them well; but we occasionally see a strange, and we should suppose, but for its general attension, a perverted taste exercised in the choice of gratifications. Nor, indeed, should it be said that children alone are thus depraved in their appetites—people of all ages, and that will account for the propensity in the younger branches, seem strangely under towards things that would appear contrary to nature, were they recorded of others.

We could mention many circumstances that would go to prove that the feeling of which we complain, is rather a settled appette than any accidental abberation of taste. Robinson belonged to the expedition against Quebec, and he happened to be on duty in the boat in which Wolfe went to vi-act some of his posts the night before the at some of his posts the night before the battle, which was expected to be demined the fate of the campaign. The exemine was fine; the scene, comilecting the work they were engaged in, and the morning to which they were clocking forward, sufficiently impressive. As they rowed along, the General, with much feelong, repeated nearly the whole of Gray's Elegy, (which had appeared not long before, and was yet but lettle heart, but on officer who ask with him in the stem of the boat; adding, as he concluded, that 'as would prefer being the author of that poem, to the glory of beating the French to-motion.

At the time when Lee was manager of the Edinburgh Theatre, he was determined to improve upon the stage thunder. For this p irpose he procured a quantity of nine-pound a.c., and putting them into a wheel-barrow he affixed thereto a nine-pound wheel; this done, ridges were placed at the back of the to trundle this wheel-barrow, so filled, back-wards and forwards over those ridges. The play was Lear, and in the two first efforts the thunder had a good officet; at length, as the King was braving 'the pelting of the pitless storm,' the thunderer's foot alipped, and down he came, wheel-barrow and all the stage being on a declivity, the balls made their way towards the orchestra, and meeting but a feeble resistance from the scene, his if flat. This storm was more difficult for Lear to encounter than that tempest of which he had so loudly complained, the bulls taking every direction. The fiddlers were slatmed, and burned out of the orchestra, while, to rewen the scene, while, to rewen the scene, while, to rewen the scene of confusion, the sprawing thunderer was discovered lying prostrate, to highly the scene of confusion, the sprawing thunderer was discovered lying prostrate, to thunderer was discovered lying prostrate, to the great amu-ement of the audience.

Three very excellent things, and of great utility, are it adding. Conversation, and itseffection. By reading we trait with the dead; by conversation, with the living and by reflection with ourselv a. Heating contents the memory, conversation polishes the mind, and reflection forms the judgment. But or these notion forms the judgment, but or these notion forms the judgment, but or these notions are then the most important, we must confess that reading access the ground work of the other two, since without reading, contemplation is fruitless, and conversation dail and incorpid.
